

Dear FCC, I am frustrated by the newest form of telemarketing using automated dialers and automated recordings. The calls come at inconvenient times. Too often when I reach the phone there is nobody on the other end and after a delay the call is automatically terminated. The lack of a live person keeps me from being able to request that my name be removed from their call list. I would like to ask you to rule against allowing automated dialers and recordings for this reason. I also support the forming of a national "do not call" list with penalties for disregarding your rules. The "do not call" list should be available to anyone by email for free, as well as by regular mail. Thank you.

Katherine S. Raulston